This is a negative or hostile attitude, opinion, or feeling toward a person or group, formed without adequate knowledge, thought, or reason. This is based on prejudice and often leads to discrimination, actions that limit some person's or group's choices and opportunities. This is rooted in ignorance and a fear of differences. Since this is learned, it can be unlearned. With awareness, education, and action, it can be weeded out.

20. Visit schools anywhere in the world, and you will probably notice a number of similarities. There are students, teachers, books, blackboards, and exams everywhere. _____, a school system in one country is not identical to the system in any other country. It cannot be exactly the same because each culture is different. The educational system is a mirror that reflects the culture. Look at the school system, and you will see the social structure and the values of its culture.

- ① However ② Therefore ③ For instance
- ④ In addition ⑤ As a result

21. When we meet someone for the first time, we notice a number of things about that person—physical characteristics, clothes, firmness of handshake, gestures, tone of voice, and the like. We then use these impressions to fit the person into ready-made categories. And this early categorization, formed quickly and on the basis of minimal information, tends to hold greater weight than impressions and information received later. Why do we rely so heavily on first impressions? Basically, we _____, because we want to categorize them so that we can process and understand information about them quickly.

- ① like to impress others
- ② dislike to judge others
- ③ are looking for a shortcut
- ④ don't know the exact reason
- ⑤ want to have their own identity

22. We are all consumers. We all buy and use products and services; that is, we consume. The word comes from the Latin consumere, which means “to use up, to waste or destroy.” Most of us don't think of ourselves as wasteful or destructive, but the world economy is based on consumerism. Today, people worldwide have greater access than ever before to a huge variety of products. What makes us decide to buy Brand A instead of Brand B, when the two items are really identical? Why do we buy things that we don't actually need? The answer lies in marketing. Successful marketers use their knowledge of psychology to _____.

- ① let us make good products
- ② make us save more money
- ③ tell us all brands are alike
- ④ have us understand human weakness
- ⑤ persuade us to consume more and more

23. Just as humans do, animals communicate with body language and sometimes gestures. “Chimpanzees” in the wild communicate a wide variety of gestures and facial expressions. To express anger, for example, a chimp stands upright on two legs, moves with a swagger — a proud walk, swinging from side to side — and waves her arms or throws branches. A nervous chimp who is afraid of a more powerful chimp will lower himself to the ground. Interestingly, when a chimp “smiles,” it is not a smile of happiness. Instead, _____.

- ① he walks around the zoo
- ② he gets along well with people
- ③ it is a gesture to express pleasure
- ④ he wipes his stomach on the ground
- ⑤ it is an expression similar to the fearful grin

The library in Blue River, Oregon, is one of the most unusual libraries in the world. If you want to borrow a book from this little library, you don't need a card. There's no time limit on borrowing, and everything is free. There's not even a librarian around most of the time, and the library door is never locked, day and night. The library is on the honor system. It was begun several years ago by Mrs. Frances O'Brien, who decided that the four little communities around Blue River needed a place to borrow books.

You can actually learn a lot of English words from reading English short stories. Just enjoy the stories and forget everything about learning grammar, sentence structures and vocabulary. If possible, just write down some words you want to learn, and look them up in a dictionary after you have finished one chapter. Then, try to put down the English meanings, part of speech and examples shown in the dictionary in your notebook, and try to use the words in your writing such as a diary or e-mails. This helps strengthen your memory of the words.

29. "Hot" and "cold" are the two main words we use to describe how we perceive temperature. They are imprinted on our consciousness at a very early age. And for the most part, we have no problem telling the difference between the two. Yet sometimes the difference isn't altogether clear. Here's an example: If you were blindfolded and someone touched you first with a hot iron and then with a piece of dry ice, you probably wouldn't be able to tell hot from cold. This is a simple demonstration of a key fact. Physiological, or bodily response isn't a dependable method for measuring temperature.

This is a true drama. A young woman and two friends flew from San Francisco to Death Valley. Flying in the mountains, the pilot chose the wrong pass, and the plane crashed into a mountain. All three survived but were badly injured. Shortly after, one friend disappeared down the steep slope. Night came, the temperature dropped, and the two survivors held on to each other for warmth. By morning, the woman was alone. At the edge of the mountain was a near vertical drop. She couldn't survive outside in the cold, so she attempted to climb down the wall of ice and rock. This book tells of the author's courage and how she endured against the odds.

This year in school I learned about the history of New England, a part of the United States. I decided to spend my summer vacation traveling around New England. I thought it would be a wonderful place to go on vacation. I believed I would enjoy seeing some of the places I learned about in school. In reality, however, I could not get enthusiastic about seeing the educational sights of New England. I wasn't sure if this was the place where I wanted to go on vacation. New England didn't seem all that great to me.

The workers then need to upgrade their skills to find a new job.

Jumping from job to job has always been more common in some professions such as building construction and not very common in other professions such as medicine and teaching. (①) Today, job hopping is increasingly common in many fields because of globalization, technology, and a movement from manufacturing to services in developed countries. (②) For example, people with factory jobs in industrial nations lose their jobs when factories move to countries where the pay is lower. (③) This is stressful, but the new job is usually better than the old one. (④) Because technology changes fast, workers need continuing education if they want to keep up with the field. (⑤)

Students seldom mention reading as a key to academic success. When you think of college, you think of attending classes and labs, completing assignments, studying for and taking exams, and writing papers. A closer look at these activities, however, reveals that reading is an important part of each one. Reading is not an obvious key to success because it is not evaluated directly. Grades are based on how well you express your ideas in papers and how well you do on exams. Yet reading is the primary means by which you acquire your ideas and gather information. Here are a few tips to get you started using reading to build academic success.

- ① 보고서 작성 요령 ② 독서 교육의 중요성
- ③ 수준별 독서 자료의 필요성 ④ 청소년기 독서의 효과
- ⑤ 학문적 성공을 위한 독서 활용법

Not all heroes have superpowers like Hercules seemed to have. Some are just plain, ordinary people who become heroes almost by accident. Maybe you've heard about some of these people. Men, women, and sometimes even children can become heroes. One thing these everyday heroes share with heroes like Hercules is bravery. These people may not fight monsters, but they do brave deeds like saving people from fires or drowning and helping when people are hurt. They help people when they need it the most, sometimes at great danger to themselves.

- ① Real heroes are necessarily strong.
- ② Heroes are destined to become heroes.
- ③ Only honesty can make a person a real hero.
- ④ Heroes must have superpowers like Hercules.
- ⑤ People happen to be heroes by doing brave deeds.

A Middle-Eastern businessman and his brother invited an American guest to their family home for dinner. The American got there on time and enjoyed the interesting conversation, the coffee. But as time passed, he got very, very hungry. Finally he asked in an impatient voice, "When do we eat?" "Finally you are hungry!" answered one of his hosts. "We were waiting for you to say you were ready to eat."

At the dinner table everything was delicious, and the American guest ate quickly. He emptied his plate, and his hosts' wives put more food on it. As soon as he cleaned his plate a second time, _____.

After several plates of food, he could eat no more: he was going to burst! "Please, Please, Please, don't give me any more food," he begged them. "I can't eat another bite!"

"Then why didn't you leave any food on the plate?" asked the other host, surprised. "We were amazed at how much you were eating!"

Suppose you did the work you love, didn't have any debt, could afford a comfortable vacation, and were rich enough to move into a bigger house. Could you be happy under those circumstances? You might say yes, but most people would probably still feel (A) in a short time. No matter how much we have, we usually want more. That is the nature of endless desire.

Why are people continuously (B) with their earthly lot? First, we are always comparing ourselves with others. We are dying to know how much money our neighbors, friends, and relatives have, where they live, what they drive, what they wear, and how they spend their vacations. It is always easy for us to fantasize about how easier life would be if we only had a little more money. Second, the mass media feed us falsely glamorous notions about the world, how the beautiful people live lives of such luxury and ease; and we want the same. So we are (C) with what we have, no matter how comfortable we may actually be: we are all like mosquitos flying into the flames.
