19. 다음 글에서 필자가 주장하는 바로 가장 적절한 것은? [3점]

It is very important to help poor countries, but it's not simple. We should be giving money or food directly to the poor in emergencies like an earthquake or flood. In less emergent situations, however, providing food can make people dependent. If a developed country gives food to a poor country, its local farmers will find it difficult to produce food to sell. We need to help poor people to earn their own money, or to produce their own food. Just giving them money or food is not a good idea. We have to find a way to help them stand on their own two feet.

Several animal species help other injured animals survive. Dolphins need to reach the surface of the water to breathe. If a dolphin is wounded so severely that it cannot swim to the surface by itself, other dolphins group themselves under it, pushing it upward to the air. If necessary, they will keep doing this for several hours. The same kind of thing happens among elephants. A fallen elephant is likely to have difficulty breathing because of its own weight, or it may overheat in the sun. Many elephant experts have reported that when an elephant falls down, other members of the group try to raise it to its feet.

You would think all bicycles must have brakes. But the bicycles used for track racing are built without brakes. A track racing bicycle has only essential parts to keep its weight down. So, how do you stop it? This is where the gloves come in. The racer backpedals, and then holds the front wheel tight with his hands. This stops the wheel from spinning, and the bicycle comes to a stop. No wonder track bicycle racers wear gloves! If they didn't, their hands would get terribly hurt every time they tried to stop.

I once watched Grandfather looking at a bush. He stood for half an hour, silent and still. As I got closer, I could see he was looking at a sort of bird, but I could not tell what kind of bird it was. Just as I was about to ask him, a common robin flew from the bush. I asked Grandfather what he was looking at. Smiling, he replied, "A robin." I said, "But Grandfather, it's just a common robin. What's so interesting about a robin?" He said, "Just a robin?" Then, he drew a picture of a bird on the ground with a stick and, handing me the stick, he said, "Show me where all the black marks on a robin are located." I said, "I don't know." "Then," he continued, "each bird is as _____ as you and I. No single bird is the same as another. We can always learn something new every time we observe a robin. That is also true of everything else in life, every experience, every situation, every bird, tree, rock, water, and leaf. We can never know enough about anything. Finally," he continued, "you do not even begin to know an animal until you touch it, and feel its spirit. Then and only then can you ever begin to know."

Some had one egg, some had two, and a few even had three.

(C)

He was about one hundred feet behind the rest of the kids who were racing madly, looking for the hidden eggs. "Oh, (c) he won't get a thing," I said to my sister who was standing beside me. Her son, Danny, was one of the first of the children to be at the head. (d) He was running quickly with other children.

(D)

At that time I saw Justin heading my way. (e) His bag was full! When he opened it, we counted twelve eggs! All the other children, in their haste, had run right past these eggs, but not Justin. He had just slowly walked along picking up the eggs the other children had run past. Sometimes, I learned then, our kids do better when we don't push them hard.
